

www.againfaster.com.au Industry Leading Functional Fitness Equipment e.service@againfaster.com.au

AGAIN FASTER
EQUIPMENT

BIG GOVERNMENT | BIG JOURNALISM | BIG HOLLYWOOD | NATIONAL SECURITY | BREITBART TV | BREITBART SPORTS | THE WIRES | 2016 : THE RACE

BREITBART LONDON | BREITBART TEXAS | BREITBART CALIFORNIA

SEARCH

HOME SUBSCRIBE

THE SEXODUS, PART 1: THE MEN GIVING UP ON WOMEN AND CHECKING OUT OF SOCIETY

f SHARE 8261 | EMAIL | g+ SHARE 507 | TWEET 447

by MILO YIANNPOULOS | 4 Dec 2014 | 25,315

“My generation of boys is f**ked,” says Rupert, a young German video game enthusiast I’ve been getting to know over the past few months. “Marriage is dead. Divorce means you’re screwed for life. Women have given up on monogamy, which makes them uninteresting to us for any serious relationship or raising a family. That’s just the way it is. Even if we take the risk, chances are the kids won’t be ours. In France, we even have to pay for the kids a wife has through adulterous affairs.

“In school, boys are screwed over time and again. Schools are engineered for women. In the US, they force-feed boys Ritalin like Skittles to shut them up. And while girls are favoured to fulfil quotas, men are slipping into distant second place.

“Nobody in my generation believes they’re going to get a meaningful retirement. We have a third or a quarter of the wealth previous generations had, and everyone’s fleeing to higher education to stave off unemployment and poverty because there are no jobs.

“All that wouldn’t be so bad if we could at least dull the pain with girls. But we’re treated like paedophiles and potential rapists just for showing interest. My generation are the beautiful ones,” he sighs, referring to a 1960s experiment on mice that supposedly predicted a grim future for the human race.

After overpopulation ran out of control, the female mice in John Calhoun’s “mouse universe” experiment stopped breeding, and the male mice withdrew from the company of others entirely, eating, sleeping, feeding and grooming themselves but doing little else. They had shiny coats, but empty lives.

“The parallels are astounding,” says Rupert.

Breitbart 1,254,224 likes

BREITBART NEWS NETWORK
LIKE US ON FACEBOOK

Like Page

St

GET 10 FREE ADOBE STOCK IMAGES.
Offer ends 30 October.
Get started >

advertisement

BREITBART VIDEO PICKS

MORE VIDEOS:

YOU MIGHT LIKE

Sponsored Links

*

Never before in history have relations between the sexes been so fraught with anxiety, animosity and misunderstanding. To radical feminists, who have been the driving force behind many tectonic societal shifts in recent decades, that's a sign of success: they want to tear down the institutions and power structures that underpin society, never mind the fall-out. Nihilistic destruction is part of their road map.

But, for the rest of us, the sight of society breaking down, and ordinary men and women being driven into separate but equal misery, thanks to a small but highly organised group of agitators, is distressing. Particularly because, as increasing numbers of social observers are noticing, an entire generation of young people—mostly men—are being left behind in the wreckage of this social engineering project.

Social commentators, journalists, academics, scientists and young men themselves have all spotted the trend: among men of about 15 to 30 years old, ever-increasing numbers are checking out of society altogether, giving up on women, sex and relationships and retreating into pornography, sexual fetishes, chemical addictions, video games and, in some cases, boorish lad culture, all of which insulate them from a hostile, debilitating social environment created, some argue, by the modern feminist movement.

You can hardly blame them. Cruelly derided as man-children and crybabies for objecting to absurdly unfair conditions in college, bars, clubs and beyond, men are damned if they do and damned if they don't: ridiculed as basement-dwellers for avoiding aggressive, demanding women with unrealistic expectations, or called rapists and misogynists merely for expressing sexual interest.

Jack Rivlin is editor-in-chief of student tabloid media start-up The Tab, a runaway success whose current strap-line reads: "We'll stop writing it when you stop reading it." As the guiding intelligence behind over 30 student newspapers, Rivlin is perhaps the best-placed person in the country to observe this trend in action. And he agrees that the current generation of young men find it particularly difficult to engage with women.

"Teenage boys always have been useless with girls, but there's definitely a fear that now being well-intentioned isn't enough, and you can get into trouble just for being clumsy," he says. "For example, leaning in for a kiss might see you branded a creep, rather than just inept."

The new rules men are expected to live by are never clearly explained, says Rivlin, leaving boys clueless and neurotic about interacting with girls. "That might sound like a good thing because it encourages men to take the unromantic but practical approach of asking women how they should behave, but it causes a lot of them to just opt out of the game and retreat to the sanctuary of their groups of lads, where being rude to women gets you approval, and you can pretty much entirely avoid one-on-one socialising with the opposite sex."

"There are also a lot of blokes who ignore women because they are scared and don't know how to act. It goes without saying that boys who never spend any time alone with women are not very good at relationships."

Rivlin has noticed the increased dependence on substances, normally alcohol, that boys are using to calm their nerves. "I've heard a lot of male students boast about never having experienced sober sex," he says. "They're obviously scared, which is natural, but they would be a lot less scared and dysfunctional if they understood 'the rules.'"

The result? "A lot of nice but awkward young men are opting out of approaching women because there is no opportunity for them to make mistakes without suffering worse embarrassment than ever."

Most troublingly, this effect is felt more acutely among poorer and less well educated communities, where the package of support resources available to young men is slight. At my alma mater, the University of Cambridge, the phenomenon barely registers on the radar, according to Union society president Tim Squirrel.

"I don't think I've really noticed a change recently," he says. "This year has seen the

This Watch Brand Is Disrupting A $60 Billion Industry
MVMT Watches

17 Beautiful Stars Who Have Aged So Horribly
Royal Lounge

25 Celebs Who Went From Not To Hot
American Live Wire

See What Tax Professionals Look For When Hiring.
The Tax Institute

by Taboola

Have Mac in your environment?
Read 3 reasons you can't afford NOT to manage them
Read now
JAMF software

advertisement

Prepare your business for growth!
#1 Online Customer Relationship Management for Small and Growing Businesses
insightly SIGN UP FREE

advertisement

Newsmax

- You Won't Believe What the IRS Lets You Do With Your IRA
- An Extremely Brilliant Way to Pay Off Your Mortgage
- Sally Fields and Burt Tie the Knot - See Her Amazing Makeover
- This Card Has No Balance Transfer Fees and Can Save You Thousands
- 68 Year Old Looks 31: You Will Not Believe Her Simple Trick
- Two Steps to Tightening Skin and Removing Eye Bags Overnight
- Sally Fields Fans and Family Shocked by Her New Makeover

MOST POPULAR

***Live Updates*** Hillary Testifies

introduction of mandatory consent workshops for freshers, which I believe is probably a good thing, and there's been a big effort by the Women's Campaign in particular to try and combat lad culture on campus.

The atmosphere here is the same as it was a year ago – mostly nerdy guys who are too afraid to approach anyone in the first place, and then a smaller percentage who are confident enough to make a move. Obviously women have agency too, and they approach men in about the same numbers as they do elsewhere. There certainly haven't been any stories in [campus newspaper] The Tab about a sex drought on campus."

"I think that people are probably having as much sex as ever," he adds. At Cambridge, of course, that may not mean much, and for a variety of socioeconomic and class-based reasons the tribes at Oxford and Cambridge are somewhat insulated from the male drop-out effect.

But even at such a prestigious university with a largely middle- and upper-class population, those patronising, mandatory "consent" classes are still being implemented. Squirrell, who admits to being a feminist with left-of-centre politics, thinks they're a good idea. But academics such as Camille Paglia have been warning for years that "rape drives" on campus put women at greater risk, if anything.

Women today are schooled in victimhood, taught to be aggressively vulnerable and convinced that the slightest of perceived infractions, approaches or clumsy misunderstandings represents "assault," "abuse" or "harassment." That may work in the safe confines of campus, where men can have their academic careers destroyed on the mere say-so of a female student.

But, according to Paglia, when that women goes out into the real world without the safety net of college rape committees, she is left totally unprepared for the sometimes violent reality of male sexuality. And the panics and fear-mongering are serving men even more poorly. All in all, education is becoming a miserable experience for boys.

*

In schools today across Britain and America, boys are relentlessly pathologised, as academics were warning as long ago as 2001. Boyishness and boisterousness have come to be seen as "problematic," with girls' behaviour a gold standard against which these defective boys are measured. When they are found wanting, the solution is often drugs.

One in seven American boys will be diagnosed with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD) at some point in their school career. Millions will be prescribed a powerful mood stabiliser, such as Ritalin, for the crime of being born male. The side effects of these drugs can be hideous and include sudden death.

Meanwhile, boys are falling behind girls academically, perhaps because relentless and well-funded focus has been placed on girls' achievement in the past few decades and little to none on the boys who are now achieving lower grades, fewer honors, fewer degrees and less marketable information economy skills. Boys' literacy, in particular, is in crisis throughout the West. We've been obsessing so much over girls, we haven't noticed that boys have slipped into serious academic trouble.

So what happened to those boys who, in 2001, were falling behind girls at school, were less likely to go to college, were being given drugs they did not need and whose self-esteem and confidence issues haven't just been ignored, but have been actively ridiculed by the feminist Establishment that has such a stranglehold on teaching unions and Left-leaning political parties?

In short: they grew up, dysfunctional, under-served by society, deeply miserable and, in many cases, entirely unable to relate to the opposite sex. It is the boys who were being betrayed by the education system and by culture at large in such vast numbers between 1990 and 2010 who represent the first generation of what I call the sexodus, a large-scale exit from mainstream society by males who have decided they simply can't face, or be bothered with, forming healthy relationships and participating fully in their local communities, national democracies and other real-world social structures.

Before Benghazi Committee

11,778 comments - 11 hours ago

Exclusive: Paul Ryan Sold House Freedom Caucus a Bill of Goods in Private Meeting on Capitol Hill

4,088 comments - 21 hours ago

DC Media Fail: Carson Surges to 8 Point Lead Over Trump in Iowa

1,432 comments - 10 hours ago

Freedom Caucus Balks at Paul Ryan, Refuses to Endorse Him

5,066 comments - 24 hours ago

Paul Ryan Will Run for Speaker—if Conservative Colleagues Stop Being a 'Problem'

9,691 comments - 2 days ago

Trump: Biden Made 'Correct Decision,' Bring On Hillary's 'Terrible Record'

3,732 comments - 1 day ago

Obama Vetoes $612B Defense Bill Over Gitmo, Increased Defense Spending

454 comments - 3 hours ago

Hillary Clinton: Chris Stevens Was Joking About Security in Benghazi

2,543 comments - 5 hours ago

Two Dead After Sweden 'Problem School' Sword Attack: Pictures Of Killer Emerge

662 comments - 8 hours ago

Eric Cantor: Anger Fueling 'Salesman' Donald Trump

626 comments - 8 hours ago

FROM THE HOMEPAGE

***Live Updates***
Hillary Testifies Before Benghazi Committee

11,778 Comments

Hillary Clinton Admits She Broke U.S. Law in Benghazi

42 Comments

Hillary Clinton: Chris Stevens Was Joking About Security in Benghazi

2,543 Comments

Paul Ryan Officially Running for Speaker of the House

136 Comments

A second sexodus generation is gestating today, potentially with even greater damage being done to them by the onset of absurd, unworkable, prudish and downright misandrist laws such as California’s “Yes Means Yes” legislation—and by third-wave feminism, which dominates newspapers like the Guardian and new media companies like Vox and Gawker, but which is currently enjoying a hysterical last gasp before women themselves reject it by an even greater margin than the present 4 out of 5 women who say they want nothing to do with the dreaded f-word.

*

The sexodus didn’t arrive out of nowhere, and the same pressures that have forced so many millennials out of society exert pressure on their parent’s generation, too. One professional researcher in his late thirties, about whom I have been conversing on this topic for some months, puts it spicily: “For the past, at least, 25 years, I’ve been told to do more and more to keep a woman. But nobody’s told me what they’re doing to keep me.

“I can tell you as a heterosexual married male in management, who didn’t drop out of society, the message from the chicks is: ‘It’s not just preferable that you should fuck off, but imperative. You must pay for everything and make everything work; but you yourself and your preferences and needs can fuck off and die.’”

Women have been sending men mixed messages for the last few decades, leaving boys utterly confused about what they are supposed to represent to women, which perhaps explains the strong language some of them use when describing their situation. As the role of breadwinner has been taken away from them by women who earn more and do better in school, men are left to intuit what to do, trying to find a virtuous mean between what women say they want and what they actually pursue, which can be very different things.

Men say the gap between what women say and what they do has never been wider. Men are constantly told they should be delicate, sensitive fellow travellers on the feminist path. But the same women who say they want a nice, unthreatening boyfriend go home and swoon over simple-minded, giant-chested, testosterone-saturated hunks in Game of Thrones. Men know this, and, for some, this giant inconsistency makes the whole game look too much like hard work. Why bother trying to work out what a woman wants, when you can play sports, masturbate or just play video games from the comfort of your bedroom?

Jack Donovan, a writer based in Portland who has written several books on men and masculinity, each of which has become a cult hit, says the phenomenon is already endemic among the adult population. “I do see a lot of young men who would otherwise be dating and marrying giving up on women,” he explains, “Or giving up on the idea of having a wife and family. This includes both the kind of men who would traditionally be a little awkward with women, and the kind of men who aren’t awkward with women at all.

“They’ve done a cost-benefit analysis and realised it is a bad deal. They know that if they invest in a marriage and children, a woman can take all of that away from them on a whim. So they use apps like Tinder and OK Cupid to find women to have protected sex with and resign themselves to being ‘players,’ or when they get tired of that, ‘boyfriends.’”

He goes on: “Almost all young men have attended mandatory sexual harassment and anti-rape seminars, and they know that they can be fired, expelled or arrested based more or less on the word of any woman. They know they are basically guilty until proven innocent in most situations.”

Donovan lays much of the blame for the way men feel at the door of the modern feminist movement and what he sees as its disingenuousness. “The young men who are struggling the most are conflicted because they are operating under the assumption that feminists are arguing in good faith,” he says, “When in fact they are engaged in a zero-sum struggle for sexual, social, political and economic status—and they’re winning.

“The media now allows radical feminists to frame all debates, in part because sensationalism attracts more clicks than any sort of fair or balanced discourse. Women can basically say anything about men, no matter how denigrating, to a mix of cheers and jeers.”

University of Missouri Liberals Smear Conservative Student as an ‘Uncle Tom’

61 Comments

Congressional Staff Leak Baby-Parts Video Blocked by Federal Judge

207 Comments

Obama Vetoes $612B Defense Bill Over Gitmo, Increased Defense Spending

454 Comments

Hillary: ‘I Believe To This Day the Video Played A Role’ In Benghazi

83 Comments

Todd: Hillary Has Been Deflecting Her Ownership of the Libyan Policy

23 Comments

Hillary: Amb Stevens Joking About Getting Additional Physical Security From Other Nations, Shows ‘Entrepreneurial Spirit’

164 Comments

Watch: Hillary Bursts Out Laughing During Benghazi Hearing

7 Comments

Hillary Clinton at Benghazi: ‘Congressman, I Believe to This Day the Video Played a Role’

13 Comments

White House: Hillary Clinton Benghazi Testimony Proves She ‘Genuinely Cares’

153 Comments

GOP Candidates use Twitter to Blast Hillary Clinton Benghazi Record

14 Comments

Hillary: I Didn’t Know Where My Libya Intelligence Came From

42 Comments

Hillary Clinton:

That has certainly been the experience of several loose coalitions of men in the media recently, whether scientists outraged by feminist denunciations of Dr Matt Taylor, or video gamers campaigning under the banner of press ethics who saw their movement smeared as a misogynistic hate group by mendacious, warring feminists and so-called “social justice warriors”.

Donovan has views on why it has been so easy for feminists to triumph in media battles. “Because men instinctively want to protect women and play the hero, if a man writes even a tentative criticism of women or feminism, he’s denounced by men and women alike as some kind of extremist scoundrel. The majority of “men’s studies” and “men’s rights” books and blogs that aren’t explicitly pro-feminist are littered with apologies to women.

“Books like The Myth of Male Power and sites like A Voice for Men are favourite boogymen of feminists, but only because they call out feminists’ one-sided hypocrisy when it comes to pursuing ‘equality.’”

Unlike modern feminists, who are driving a wedge between the sexes, Men’s Rights Activists “actually seem to want sexual equality,” he says. But men’s studies authors and male academics are constantly tip-toeing around and making sure they don’t appear too radical. Their feminine counterparts have no such forbearance, of course, with what he calls “hipster feminists,” such as the Guardian’s Jessica Valenti parading around in t-shirts that read: “I BATHE IN MALE TEARS.”

“I’m a critic of feminism,” says Donovan. “But I would never walk around wearing a shirt that says, “I MAKE WOMEN CRY.” I’d just look like a jerk and a bully.”

It’s the contention of academics, sociologists and writers like Jack Donovan that an atmosphere of relentless, jeering hostility to men from entitled middle-class media figures, plus a few confused male collaborators in the feminist project, has been at least partly responsible for a generation of boys who simply don’t want to know.

In Part 2, we’ll meet some of the men who have “checked out,” given up on sex and relationships and sunk into solitary pursuits or alcohol-fuelled lad culture. And we’ll discover that the real victims of modern feminism are, of course, women themselves, who have been left lonelier and less satisfied than they have ever been.

Some names have been changed.

READ MORE STORIES ABOUT:

Breitbart London

We Recommend

Sponsored Links by Taboola

How Kiwis Living in Australia Are Paying Thousands For 'Worthless' Life Insurance
lisagroup.com.au

Don't Buy Any of These 15 Cars
Forbes

Do You Have Royal Blood? Your Surname May Tell You.
Ancestry

This Watch Brand Is Disrupting A $60 Billion Industry
MVMT Watches

We Saved Ourselves $32,500 On Our Mortgage Simply By...
finder.com.au

Choose From a Diverse Range of Degrees on Offer at SCU.

Hillary Clinton: 'I Did Not Email During The Day'

3,048 Comments

Hillary Clinton Plugs Book In Answer About Youtube Video

16 Comments

Amb. Chris Stevens Did NOT Have My Personal Email

721 Comments

Exclusive — Marco Rubio: Hillary Clinton Failed in Benghazi, Overall Foreign Policy

312 Comments

SIGN UP FOR OUR NEWSLETTER

Input field for email address

SUBMIT

Fox News National

There's No Such Thing as a Bug-Free App
22 Oct 2015, 3:00 PM PDT

---

Putting Your Business at Risk is a Communications Channel You'd Never Guess: Paper
22 Oct 2015, 2:30 PM PDT

---

The Best Way to Spend $1,000 Marketing Your Business
22 Oct 2015, 2:00 PM PDT

---

Volkswagen Faces the Most Onerous Rebranding Challenge In History, Again
22 Oct 2015, 1:57 PM PDT

---

3 Steps to Your 'Unfair Speaking Advantage'
22 Oct 2015, 1:30 PM PDT