Science, God and investing time...!

Posted on April 25, 2013 by Courtney

Being someone who does not believe in a specific God or any sort of religion does not mean I am closed to inquiring about understanding spirituality, consciousness, unlimited creativity, the human condition and the meaning of meaning.

I don't believe it is my place to try to convince anyone that God does not exist, after all non~believing is just another form of belief! Paradoxically by the way I do love a good kirtana.

I have found in life that the harder one tries to convince someone his beliefs are not real achieves the opposite and that "Man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still" and so trying to open a closed mind is not a good place to invest our brief time. We all need to relax a little!

I do believe we live at the far edge of consciousness which is ever expanding and I love to explore out there and in there!

This article is a fascinating read on the subject of SCIENCE, GOD, Consciousness and the seeking of truth about what lies inside and outside of us, however good or bad that is.

I have no clue why I wrote this but... hey ho...the article is truly fascinating.

I'm not promoting the membership of this particular group and nor am I a member I just found the article fascinating.
